

[Side theological note which departs from the main point of the blog:]

I truly believe that Russell is onto something vital here. God has designed the man to be the head of the family. We are supposed to lead our family by faith in the ways of the Lord. We are supposed to be the High Priests of the household. Nothing damages a young family's faith journey more than when the leader demonstrates to the woman that he is leading that his vows to the Lord are unimportant.

If Russell Wilson were to have sex with Ciara now before they got married, he would be sending her an unspoken message:

1. My faith is not more important than my sexual urges.
2. I believe in God but I will break my word with him, so you know I will break my word with you.

Yes, it's true that even within the Christian Community very few people keep their vows to God until marriage. THAT IS WHY OUR COUNTRY IS SO JACKED UP. THAT IS WHY WE HAVE NO MORAL LEVERAGE WITH THE GAY COMMUNITY REGARDING THE PROFANATION OF MARRIAGE OR ANY OTHER SIN SUBJECT. If we want to morally stabilize our country and return the church to GREATNESS, I believe it begins with men like Russell taking stands like this. This strengthens the family. The family will strengthen everything else.
